International Livestock Congress to be Held in Colorado

The annual International Livestock Congress (ILC) will be held on Tuesday, January 12, 2010, at the Renaissance Denver Hotel. The theme for this year's event is "Preparing for Future Global Demand."

"The ILC is a great opportunity for Colorado cattlemen and feeders to hear from industry leaders and learn about the global trends and issues that are likely to impact their operations in the future," said Tom Lipetzky, Markets Division Director for the Colorado Department of Agriculture. "It's not often that a program and speakers of this caliber are available here in Colorado, so I encourage anyone involved in Colorado's livestock industry to attend."

Producers, packers, retailers, students and other industry leaders will hear about future trends of the global meat markets, international trade markets, and agricultural trends, including discussion about the current economic impact and political updates that affect the cattle industry.

Funded in part by the National Cattlemen's Foundation, the ILC is produced in cooperation with the International Stockmen's Educational Foundation (ISEF) and the National Western Stock Show.
